BERLIN, Sept. 1—At a meeting of the Federal Economic Council yesterday a resolution was passed pressing for the creation of a new stable currency, and statements were made showing that in default of stabilization, German factories would have to close. The fact is that no stabilization of exchange, whether by creating a new currency or in any other way, can be reached without balancing the budget and of this there is at the present moment, not the slightest prospect. COUNCIL CALLED TO STUDY COMMUNICATION OF ATHENS: CORFU SEIZURE 'TEMPORARY'

Greek Internal Situation Acute and Government's Position Is Regarded as Untenable—Italian Navy Steams for Southern Adriatic Waters

Greece's appeal to the League of Nations against Italy's occupation of Corfu comes before the delegates at Geneva today. So sudden has the crisis developed through seizure of the island that the internal situation in Athens has become acute and the Government's position is regarded as untenable. In Italy events are moving swiftly. A second ultimatum has been transmitted to the Hellenes, Italian naval units stationed at Spezia and Venice are steaming for southern waters, and reservists in London have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness for a call to the colors. Meantime the Mussolini Government is endeavoring to confine the affair to Italy and Greece and has announced that the present occupation will be the limit of advances for enforcement of LONDON, Sept. 1-Italy has occupied the Island of Corfu and has transmitted a second ultimatum to Greece, in which the Hellenic Government is given five hours to comply with the full terms of the original six demands. Meanwhile Greece, after having rejected the fourth, fifth and sixth of the original demands forwarded by Italy, has appealed to the League of Nations. Thus the League is brought to its full test. The decision of Benito Mussolini to occupy Corfu and dispatch a IS UPHELD IN ITALY second ultimatum to the Athens Gov-ernment was reached at a Cabinet council held in Rome yesterday when the Greek reply to the Italian ulti-Causes and Nature of Occupation

Here the situation is regarded as being very grave and the consensus of opinion is that developments in the next few hours may have far-reaching results. The Council of the League held its first sitting of the present sesernment has been firm and prompt in Greek crisis today.

Pressure Brought on Italy

Rome dispatches describe the attack and the taking of Corfu as the seizure of "a pledge to assure the carrying out by Greece of the conditions imposed by the Italian Government." The seizure is declared to be "in no sense an act of hostility, according to international usage.'

A dispatch from Corfu says the Italian fleet arrived off Corfu late yesterday afternoon and after 10 minutes notice to the British Consul bombarded the city. The dispatch asserts there were numerous casualties. Opinion here is that there will be quick action on the part of the League of Nations in connection with the incident. The precipitate Italian action, both with regard to the dispatch of the ultimatums and the seizure of PREPARE TO LEAVE Corfu, is regarded as nothing less than an Italian challenge to the League's authority. If Italy makes good this challenge and refuses to be restrained by the League the covenant at once becomes a mere "scrap of paper."

Meantime, however, the Mussolini government is taking grave risks in their obviously blind and heedless action against Greece, since if the League decides to enforce the penalties authorized by the covenant against it and the powers signatory to the covenant back up the League—as the indications now are they will—the Mussolini Government will be placed in a position from which it will be difficult for them to withdraw without considerable loss or prestige both at

It is a curious coincidence that at the moment when the Assembly of the League begins meeting at Geneva a warlike event should startle the world. If the League can prevent the worst consequence it will acquire great credit. But if it proves useless to avert war then its prestige must sink. Either the League of Nations will fulfill its duty—and it will not do so—or we will return to the Middle Ages and thus destroy all notion of progress.

Greece to Abide by League

Decision in Dispute With Italy ATHENS, Sept. 1 (AP)-Greece will abide by the decision of the League of Nations in the dispute with Italy, the Premier, Colonel Gonatas, announced to the press after the cabinet meeting today

Italian squadron had bombarded at Corfu had been placed at the disposal Italian of the Near East Relief by the Greek Government for the housing of refugee orphans. The Premier announced officially that some of the orphans were killed and said that although he not know the exact number he understood it was 15.

The Government has been informed

Nations is found to be of no avail, Greece would have the right to think that the whole idea which inspired its creation had failed, and then, driven by despair, would be forced to have recourse to the only means of defending itself against an Italian invasion.

The statement declares that, when the Italian Minister presented his note in regard to the occupation of Corfu, the Greek Minister of Foreign Affairs replied that the occupation could only be regarded as a hostile act. The statement continues: Greece, although small, could and ought to reply to this act of hostility, but it does not intend to reply, as it preferred to address itself to the League, being convinced that it would condemn the Italian move as a viola-

SENATOR CAPPER EXPECTS SENATE TO INDORSE COURT

Domestic Problem-Blames Freight Charges

That the most serious and pressing domestic problem encountered by the United States today is that of transportation, while the entry of the Republic into the World Court is the most insistent foreign question is the frank opinion of Arthur Capper, United States Senator from Kansas, who is spending a short vacation at Magnolia on the North Shore. This afternoon Senator Capper spoke at the Essex County Agricultural Expo-sition at Topsfield on "The American Farmer, His Present Condition and Without any hesitation, Mr. Capper esterday said to a representative The Christian Science Monitor that he expected the Senate would indorse, but not without opposition on the part of some, President Harding's plan for this country to enter the World Court.

"This country, the people of the United States, I believe favor our assuming some share in the responsibility for the conduct of world affairs," said Mr. Capper. "I do not affairs," said Mr. Capper. "I do not think that the League of Nations will be discussed to any extent in the coming session of the sixty-eighth Congress, for I do not think they are ready to take part in the League until they are certain just how far their responsibilities shall go.

Should Shun Aloofness

"But there is a growing belief that we should not hold entirely aloof; that we should show to the other nathe world that we are interested in the good of all, that we will do what we can to help them steady their affairs and bring conditions back to what they should be. We do not want to be pledged to guarantee boundaries of nations nor to be obligated to send armies to Europe; I think that has been made plain.

Mr. Capper said that he thought nat the European debtor nations should reimburse the United States for its war loans. He said in this view he believed that he expressed the prevailing thought of the west, where there was pronounced opposi-tion to the ideas advanced in certain quarters in the east to the purport that the United States should liquidate these loans in the interest of European financial stability.

"Domestic problems will occupy the attention of the coming Congress, at least its first session," said the Senator. "You know, there is a presidential election coming and the tendency will be to go slow, especially as regards Old World conditions. I think Secretary Hughes' ideas regarding our entry into the World Court will find strong support in the Senate, outside of that I do not expect to see overseas affairs occupy much of the attention

The Senator said that he believed that the condition of the American farmer is growing slightly better. He said that in Verseal the condition of the American farmer is growing slightly better. said that in Kansas, his own State, which has raised more than one-fifth of the entire wheat crop produced in the United States, that one-fifth less acreage has been planted with wheat this year than for five years in order to put an end to overproduction.

Criticizes Freight Rates

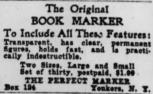

Transportation is the great probthe farmer has to pay 22 cents a months and expects to visit many bushel for shipping his wheat to Chithere allowing him something like 80 cents a bushel for wheat which really

Continuing, he said:

The consumer is not getting the benefit. The feeling is that our railroads are now getting in pretty good condition and that they should agree readily to scale down their freight rates.

Today the situation is 10-cent bread or higher for the consumer, while the farmer, the producer, gets but 80 cents for the wheat which costs him not less than $1.20 to grow. The same situation prevails, of course, in the beef industry. The railroads get high freight rates, while the grower gets a minimum.

The people of this country are being brought to see that basically, if this Diversified farming, such as the Calls Transportation Most Serito offer the readlest solution. Organization and co-operative marketing are also sound solutions. He said that he and others have been preaching put-ing more of the land into alfalfa and other foodstuffs for live stock. He said that with the transportation problem adjusted more equitably and profits spread more justly the raising of more live stock will be very profitable the country over.

Senator Capper said with a laugh that the farm bloc of which he is the chairman in Congress is not "bad." "We merely banded together to get some measure of justice for the agriculturist," he said with a characterstoic smile. He then said:

Here's our record for the Sixty-seventh Congress: Passed the bill which makes it legal for the agriculturists to organize for the production and sale of their staples.

Passed the law which places grain exchanges under government supervi-sion, thus making it impossible for men to "corner" wheat, corn or any grain or to otherwise manipulate the mar-or to otherwise manipulate the market.

Passed the law which gives the Government like oversight and control of the packing houses.

Passed the law which requires the President of the United States to appoint at least one representative of agriculture on the Federal Reserve Board, and, finally,

Passed the Rural Credit Act, which sets up 12 intermediate credit banks, with capital of $12,000,000 each, which they are to lend agriculturists or associations of agriculturists for farming purposes at 5½ per cent interest, and on the security of their agricultural products.

Not one of these acts, Senator Capper maintained, was radical or un-just or even class legislation as ordinarily understood,

"The farm bloc, so-called," he said, "merely seeks for the agriculturist just what the manufacturer and the financier and the merchant has de-manded, that is proper protection and encouragement in the conduct of his activities which mean so much for the

Coolidge Optimism

Mr. Capper said that he had had two recent interviews with President Coolidge and that he found him broadminded, fair, sympathetic toward the farmer and with an "adequate grasp" of domestic and world affairs. He said that if the President gives the country a good and sensible admin-istration and if the Republican Party gives him full support in such a pro-gram that Mr. Coolidge would prob-ably be nominated for a full term "and I should think elected," he added.

Senator Capper went yesterday to Nahant to call upon Senator Henry Cabot Lodge. He said that he was enjoying his stay on the North Shore but that he had not anticipated making speeches at Topsfield this afternoon nor in Melrose next Friday night. He is to speak for the American Legion in Melrose. His Topsfield speech this afternoon was much along the line of what he told The Christian Science Monitor representative about the farmer and present tive about the farmer and present farming conditions.

The senator, who is just completing his first term in the Senate, is a candidate for re-election. So far as has developed he is not likely to counter opposition but with a whim-sical smile which is part of the man, he said "It's quite a way off yet," speaking of the nomination and eleclem we must solve in the United tion. He has spoken in 42 of the States," he said. "In Kansas today 105 counties in Kansas in the past few

Although they virtually acceded to the 10 per cent pay increase nor did they reject the check-off proposition, miners flatly refused to consider the suggestion for arbitration of their other 11 demands-should they be unable to reach an agreement on them with the operators, by the anthracite board of conciliation.

The operators on the other hand made their response to the Pinchot plan contingent upon the miners withgroups of men. It was a battle of ter. This, it is said, is proving a difficult obstacle for Governor Pinchot in his capacity as mediator. Whether

The miners are heartily in accorwith the suggestion in the Governor's plan for a complete revision of the wage scale in the anthracite, but on that subject the operators were silent in their reply. It is known that they do not favor such revision-indeed, they have fought it years, for the reason, it is said, that with the present lack of system they are able to fix rates more or less to suit them-

The operators do not agree with Governor Pinchot that the 10 per cent increase will add only 60 cents a ton to be held in connection with the to domestic sizes of coal, but declare 000 which they figure will amount to 75 cents a ton on domestic sizes. Moreover, they declare that it is impossible for any person to assure absorption of this increased cost by the transportation and distributing agencles. Governor Pinchot was prepared for that objection and revealed not only his own plans but those of President Coolidge for securing a reduction of freight rates and holding the retailers, wholesalers and speculators in check.

Propaganda Hinted

Of course, the operators asserted that there was no economic necessity for advancing wages, while the miners presented their argument on the other side of the question claiming at the same time that 10 per cent was not enough to give a living wage to the day-wage men who constitute 65 per cent of the mine employees. However, I think the Bar Association's action will be considered as a recommendation of the court in Mr. Hughes gave the true meaning of the Monroe Doctrine in his address. Autumn and Winter Fashions are Ready

There is no one day upon which we can call ourselves so completely ready for this or any other season's business that we expect to find ourselves less prepared on each succeeding day to meet our customers' needs. Yet, as the season opens, we make every effort to put before our customers the best that the season has to offer. Into this preparation have gone the best efforts of our organization—the best style-knowledge, the best fabric-knowledge, the best judgment that we can muster. To this is added that intimate knowledge of the particular requirements of our customers that comes from years of daily contact.

We are showing now as comprehensive a representation of fashionable apparel as we are likely to assemble at any time this season. The new styles which have been developed by the leading manufacturers are as well established as they will be later in the season. The new fabrics, which make their appearance both made up into garments in our ready-to-wear departments and in the piece in our yard-goods department on the second floor, have already won definite places in the season's fashions: We don't call this or any other day an "opening," but we are readynever more so.

air route organized by the Royal Swedish Waterfalls Board to keep the workers on a new dam which was being constructed at Suorva in communication with the Porjus power station to serve while the dam was being built. From the latter part of 1921 until a few weeks ago regular flights were carried out three times a week or oftener, but the dam is now finished and the two pilots, Robert Holmen and G. Hultström have reing 721 passengers, 1571 kilograms of mail and 18,897 kilograms of goods since the flights were first inaugurated. The town of Porjus is the terminus of a little railway which branches off from the Lulea-Narvik railway—the connecting link between the Baltic Sca and the Arctic Ocean.

From Two Days to One Hour Until the air service was started, the 400 or 500 workmen engaged on the Sourva dam were almost isolated from the outside world, the journey to Porjus under the most favorable circumstances occupying not less than two days. The time taken by air was about one hour.

The machine first used on the service was an English Fairey, with a 360 horsepower Rolls Royce engine. It was soon found, however, that owing to the unusual air currents and the nature of the ground, a compara-tively small lightweight machine was needed. Accordingly, an Avro type 504-K, with a 130 horsepower Clerget motor, was decided upon. This type proved entirely satisfactory. Owing to the extreme cold—sometimes as much as 50 centigrade below zero the engine was air and not water In summer the machine was fitted with floats for use as a seaplane, while in winter it had skids so as to be able to alight on the snow.

Gulf Stream Affected Flight Strangely enough the cold scarcely interfered with the traffic at all. Landing, however, often proved difficult in the transition period from winter to summer, when the ice was breaking up and the snow had turned to slush. The short winter days, too, when the light only lasts for two or three hours, sometimes made it necessary to carry out at least part of the flight in dark-

Flying was sometimes rendered difficult by the effects of the Gulf Stream which were distinctly felt at Suorva, where the temperature is usually con-siderably higher than at Porjus further to the south. It sometimes hap-pened that when a machine left Suorva in mild, damp weather and suddenly encountered the colder air near Porjus the wings became so thickly coated with ice that further flight was impossible. Nevertheless, a surprising degree of regularity was obtained and, in 1922, every mail flight undertaken during the month of June was completed within scheduled time. The worst month as regards regularity was February, when the curve fell to 50 per cent. The average over the whole period of working, however, was nearly 80 per cent.

News of Freemasonry

By DUDLEY WRIGHT Special from Monitor Bureau

London, Aug. 12 HAT Mozart's "Magic Flute"-his Masonic opera-should be performed by a company of boys, and excellently performed, too, seems incredible. Such, however, is the fact. The opera has just been rendered by schoolboys at the Robert Monteflore Jewish School, Whitechapel. Perhaps the reason for the excellent rendering lies in the fact that the boys were so tremendously interested in the work, and they made themselves responsible even for the stage setting.

The "Only Lady Freemason" has made her reappearance. At any rate, the editor of one prominent daily newspaper says that he has received a 'very interesting account of the manner in which the only lady who has ever been a Freemason achieved that distinction." It appears that she was in a room adjoining the jodge and fell asleep. When she awoke the lodge was in full swing. This led to her detection, and she was therefore initiated. It would seem that it was the editor of the daily, and not the lady, that was caught napping.

As a result of the efforts of the Provincial Grand Master, the Rev. J. Wylle Smith, seconded by his Provincial Grand Secretary, John Campbell, Lodge St. John of Dunning, which some 30 years ago was one of the strongest lodges in East Perthshire, is to be reopened and reconstituted.

St. Mary's Lodge, Braintree, has celebrated its jubilee in a manner that is worthy of emulation by other lodges in similar circumstances. It has placed in a memorial chapel of the parish church a beautifully carved oak lectern to commemorate the event, bearing the dates of the foundation of the lodge and of the jubilee, with various Masonic signs on the front. and the following inscription: "To the glory of God and to commemorate the jubilee of St. Mary's Lodge this lectern is presented to the parish church of St. Michael's, Braintree."

The chapel was the best preserved portion of the paristicature of the partition of the partitionary of the profit o portion of the architecture of the church and dated from 1535, when it was first used as a guild chapel.

Some interesting sidelights on Free-masonry appear in the recently pub-lished history of the Indefatigable Lodge, Swansea. It appears that it has had but 10 tylers in 120 years and more remarkable still, only 2 in the

DOUBLES MATCH VERY IMPORTANT

'Anderson's Victory Over Johnston in Singles Makes Davis Cup Competition More Interesting

FOREST HILLS, N. Y., Sept. 1 (Special)-Not since the famous Davis Cup was brought back to this country from Australasia in 1920 was so much importance attached to the outcome of the oubles part of a challenge round as was the case today when Capt. R. N. Williams 2d and W. T. Tilden 2d, United States, were called upon to face Capt. J. O. Anderson and J. B. Hawkes of the Australian challengers. This was beuse for the first time since 1914, a United States singles player had gone

Australian challengers. This was because, for the first time since 1914, a United States singles player had gone down to defeat in a challenge round match as the result of Anderson's victory over W. M. Johnston in the opening match on the courts of the West Side Tennis Club yesterday afternoon. 4—6, 6—2, 2—6, 7—5, 6—2.

Williams and Tilden had never before played together in a big match, while Anderson and Hawkes were rated as a strong combination. Should the defenders win, it would give the United States a lead of 2 to 1 with only one victory in Monday's singles necessary to keep the cup; but should the Challengers win, the United States would have to win both of Monday's matches or see the cup start on another long trip to Australia.

Johnston was far below the form that has brought him into the position he now holds in the tennis world. This was particularly apparent after the third set. He was utterly unable to score on the brilliant shots for the edge of the court, which have been his mainstay in his past victories. His first service, which has put out so many champions in the past, did not seem to have the force of previous matches, though the skill of Anderson may have been a factor in this result.

The Australian captain has never played better tennis than he showed in the second and parts of the fourth sets. In the former, when Johnston had 40 love in the critical fifth game. Anderson scored five placements in a row of service, taking the game. Later, in the final set, Anderson won a love game on four service acos, a feat never before witnessed in a Davis Cup match.

Johnston had services in the opening of the first set and held his own service for the first part of the set, though Anderson gave a hint of what was to come when he led at 15—40 in the fifth game on four service acos, a feat never before witnessed in a Davis Cup match.

Johnston rush the net and take the game. But on Johnston's next service game the Australian broke through and led at a critical time. In the final game, after he was at se during the third set. After service had taken the first three games, the Callfornian forced play in the fourth game, and broke through into the lead on his own placement and three outs by Anderson, in a love game. By brilliant net play he then ran out the set, 6—2, giving him the lead at the customary year.

But the balance of the match was all in favor of the visitor. Though Johnston fought hard, forcing deuce in most of the games, Anderson held the lead all through the fourth set, and after Johnston, by a supreme effort, brought the score to 5-all, and forced deuce points in the final game, the effort proved too great, and Anderson took the set, 7—5.

Johnston was apparently unable to play at all in the opening games of the final set. On Anderson's first service game, every service of the Australian went for an ace, a feat never equaled in a tennis match between players of this standard. After Anderson had taken three games in a row, Johnston steadied a trifle, and fought hard for the balance of the match. It was hopeless, however, as Anderson was now at the top of his form, and merely played steady tennis, contenting himself with fair play without much trying for brilliant placements. He was five times within a point of victory before he clinched it. The match by points:

Tilden was ready to do so. Tilden was, as usual, invincible on service, except toward the middle of each set, while his varied game gave him the advantage whenever he chose to take it. His net game was superb, and his back-court work especially effective.

Tilden led at 5—1 in the first set and at 4—0 in the second, but in each case he silowed the Australian left-hander a chance after that and merely served his service for a final scoring point. In the final set the Philadelphian apparently decided that he was ready to finish, and after that Hawkes never got a point, losing 10 rallies in a row. The match by points:

CHICAGO, Sept. 1 (A)-Few changes took place in the batting standing of the two major leagues players during the last week. In the National there was no change among the first four men, while in the American League the men, while in the American League the first four men were the same, but Tristram Speaker, who was third a week ago, switched places with Joseph Sewell, who was fourth.

In the National, Rogers Hornsby of St. Louis dropped another two points and is hitting .395, but is 20 points in front of Z. D. Wheat of Brooklyn, who has .375. The latter dropped three points during the week. Bottomley of St. Louis is third, with .373.

F. C. Williams of Philadelphia is in the lead again in home runs with 33, a single-homer more than G. H. Ruth. Ross Young of New York leads in runs scored with 105, a gain of four, but he dropped a full 10 points in his batting average. F. F. Frisch of New York leads in the total base column with 260.

hitting, four points less than last week. Harry Heilmann of Detroit, however, increased his percentage six points to .394. The home run king, however, leads in his special line with 32, in total bases with 308, and in runs scored with 119. E. T. Collins of Chicago remains in the lead of the fleet-footed, heading the base stealers with 37. Collins also leads in sacrificing, having made 35. Canada Seems Sure of Taking Gold Cup

Rainbow III Has 16 Points in Speedboat Standing

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 1—That the Gold Cup and championship title of North America will go to Canada this year, after having reposed in this city for seven years, seemed practically cer-tain today, when the fastest speed boats in the world lined up for the third and final heat of the twenty-first annual race for this competition on the Detroit River.

Two heats have already been held and both were won by the Rainbow III, Commodore H. B. Greening, Royal Hamilton Yacht Club, Hamilton, Ont., at the helm. This gives the Canadian 16 points in the Gold Cup standing. The Packard Christcraft, last year's winner, has finished second in the two heats run, thus having a total of 11 points in the standing. In order to keep the cup in the United States, the Packard must win today's heat, while the Rainbow III finishes third or lower. Should the Canadian finish third, it the Rainbow III finishes third or lower.

Should the Canadian finish third, it would leave the two boats tied at 22 points each.

In the two heats already run, the Rainbow III has not been forced to the Ilmit. In the second heat yesterday, Raibow won by covering the 30-mile course in 40m. 13%s., an average of 44.75 miles per hour. This was quite a bit slower than the time for the first heat, which gave the Canadian an average of 45.1 miles per hour. After the second lap of yesterday's race, it was simply a procession. The Baby Packard, Col. J. D. Vincent's new boat, which was expected to win the cup this which was expected to win the cup this year, but which capsized in the first heat. Wednesday, was back in the race yesterday, but could not do better than place third. The Goldfish, owned by E. B. Ford, finished fourth, five miles belief the wife of the country hind the winner. Curtis Baby Gar, with G. A. R. Wood at the wheel, was disqualified.

NARROW MARGIN BETWEEN BOATS

Henry Ford and Elizabeth How ard Closely Matched for Speed

GLOUCESTER, Mass., Sept. 1 (Special)—Gloucester fishermen are still discussing the result of the great fishercussing the result of the great fishermen's race, which was won off this port yesterday by the Henry Ford of this city in an exciting finish with the Elizabeth Howard of New York. That these two boats are the fastest fishermen in the United States is pretty generally admitted here, but as to which of the two is the faster seems to bring out considerable argument. The Ford, being a Gloucester boat, has a majority back of it, but the Howard is not without followers.

The Ford showed in the 31-mile race yesterday that under light winds she has no superior, while the Howard showed, as the breeze increased, that she is slightly faster than the Ford. The margin between the Ford and Howard was only 25 seconds at the first mark; but after leaving the first mark, the Ford gained a lead of about five min-Ford gained a lead of about five min-utes. Rounding the second mark, how-ever, the Howard was only 2m. 35s. behind the leader, and this was grad-ually reduced over the rest of the course until at the finish the margin was only 50 seconds, the Ford having an elapsed time of 4h. 17m. 30s. The Shamrock of Boston, the other entrant in the race, finished 14m. 63s. behind the Ford.

For winning the race Capt, Clayton

For winning the race Capt. Clayton Morrissey received the Sir Thomas Lipton Cup and $1000 in cash, which was divided by his crew, while Capt. M. L. Welch and the crew of the Shamrock divided $800.

PICK-UPS

CINCINNATI certainly lost a golden opportunity to reduce the Glants lead yesterday. It is interesting to note that both teams lost by the same score—5 to 1. The Glants' defeat was the most surprising as Brooklyn had been a pretty consistent loser of late.

Holding G. H. Ruth to no hits in four times at bat is a pretty good performance for any pitcher and Zahnister of the Senators deserved a better fate than to lose the game. Despite four double plays, his support was not what it should have been.

Ruth and Heilmann are having a great hattle for American League batting honors and it looks as if one or the other would be the leading major-league batter for 1923 as Rogers Hornsby of St. Louis does not appear able to keep in the .400-class and unless there is a big slump either Ruth or Heilman will have to initiah in that class in order to beat the other.

The program will last four days. The purpose is to provide a better understanding of the economic factors underlying motor transportation in every part of the world. In view of recent Continental adoptions by leading manufacturers, the discussion on a ground of common understanding, of conditions in every country in the world, will prove most beneficial to all in attendance.

sible winners in the 10 events listed to-day had their initial workouts yesterday in the junior championships.

Not until the 880-yard run, the final event, was decided did the winner of team honors emerge. The Illinois Athletic Club, which won with 48 points, had trailed the Chicago Athletic Association at all previous stages. The Score stood 45 for the Cherry Circle and 40 for the Tricolor when Coach J. W. Behr threw in two star half-milers to take first and second for the Illinois Club. The Chicago organization did not score in the event.

The general feeling, which is creasing in Spain now, is that either Alhucemas must be taken or Morocco abandoned altogether, compromises being costly and ineffective. Division exists in the Cabinet on the policy to be adopted, Santiago Alba, Foreign Minister, declaring that an attack on Alhucemas will certainly not take place, while the Finance Minister says costly. It is believed that others are more in favor of an attack, and the public suspects that a big attack may be begun suddenly, when there are enough troops in Morocco and warships in place to take the country by surprise with an accomplished fact.

Weeks of preparation however are necessary, but it is significant that warships already are maneuvering about this coast. Raisuli has suddenly made fresh demands on Spain, and an official has been sent to negotiate with him. The rebel attack against the Spaniards was within two miles of Raisuli's headquarters. Complaints that the French elements in Algiers The line will not be regarded as a and the French in Morocco are giving assistance to the rebels, increase.

Fresh Crisis in Europe and Anthracite Strike Disturb a Rising Stock Market

The opening of hostilities between like and Greece and the beginning of the anthracite strike were disturbing factors affecting the stock market at the end of the week, although domestic developments had assisted in maintaining a firm tone in the preceding four or five days.

to the highest figure at which it has sold for weeks. Great Northern made a better report for July than its competitor and its stock moved up quite sharply.

The outlook is for a continuance of good business for the railroads during the rest of the year unless there is a prolonged anthracite strike. Some observers think that it would not affect the business of the country and the public forms of the country and the process of the process observers think that it would not affect the business of the country and the earnings of the railroads to the extent that has been feared in some circles. The bank statement, diclosed another sensational increase in note circulation. Despite these facts, there was a disposition in international banking circles to be more hopeful over the European stuation, chieffy, as already intimated, because of the seemingly growing disposition to get together and talk things over in a man-to-man fashion, and to discontinue the exchange of futile disponation notes.

Probably more attention was raid in the Street to statements by prominent also to the outlook for business in the United States than has been true for many weeks. It is more than likely that the strength of the stock market was due to a great extent to a summary of ideas said to be entertained by President Coolidge, as outlined at the White House.

The following assertion, which ap-

it is pointed out that an examination of the latest figures issued by the Federal Reserve System ought to satisfy even those of the most doubting mind. The business interests of this country and its great financiers have wanted for a long time to feel justified that they could go ahead with business "in the present grooves," and not be afraid that they would be compelled to switch out of those paths into others of an unknown and untried character.

Much attention was given also to an interview with President Mitchell of the National City Bank of New York.

Schirmer. Atherton & Co., Boston: We look for the stock market to continue to steadily improve until such time as strong interests have disposed of the securities they accumulated during the slump of late May, June, and part of July. After such a transference, resulting in a large increase in brokers' loans, the market will probably be a sale again.

WEEK'S REVIEW OF CHIEF EVENTS IN BRITISH FINANCE

Industrial Shares Depressed-Coal and Iron Trade Dull-Unemployment Gaining

LONDON, Sept. 1—Although there was some reaction Thursday following profit-taking, the lessened anxiety in the city regarding the reparation situation has been generally evidenced in a tion has been generally evidenced in a continuation this week of more cheerful conditions. Strength, particularly, was shown by gilt-edge securities, and in the earlier part of the week by home-raiways, rubber shares, and kaffirs. The trade position, however, as demonstrated by the stock exchange barometer, has shown only little improvement. The demand for gilt-edge stock is a bad sign industrially, especially, as it has The demand for gilt-edge stock is a bad sign industrially, especially, as it has been coupled with depression in home industrial shares, which has greatly contributed to the 1.4 per cent decline registered in the August index of the value of variable dividend securities, compiled by the Bankers' Magazine.

Dividends Being Passed Another commentary from the investors' angle is afforded by the fact that of 77 Lancashire cotton spinning firms, ewning about 8,000,000 spindles, with a total paid-up capital of £11,750,000, which have recently reported, 62 passed their dividend.

which have recently reported, 62 passed their dividend.

The trend of trade generally is fairly clearly shown in the addition in a fortnight of 31,000 to the persons unemployed, which now number 1,223,000.

August always is a slow month so far as capital issues are concerned, but this year there have been no borrowings at all of any real importance, and the month's total will probably beat the low record set in August of last year.

the month's total will probably beat the low record set in August of last year, when only little more than £1,000,000 was offered for public subscription.

The bank return shows a depletion in the money market's resources of more than £2,500,000, "other" deposits being down to £103,500,000. After an abstention for some time, America has reappeared as a considerable buyer in the rubber market. London rubber stocks have sunk to 47,500 tons, the lowest point since December, 1920.

Coal Trade Dull

Export coal demand has been dull. although prices are now down virtually to the level of the beginning of the year. There are, however, signs of improvement in increased inquiries. Events in the United States are followed with the closest attention and those holding classes of coal likely to be in demand in case of a strike in the United States are followed from the United States are followed in game of a strike in the United States are founding firm prices and selling sparjuoting firm prices and selling spar-

While iron and steel markers are hoping for a revival, coincident with the end of the holiday season, present conditions are not good, and only 41 out of 114 furnaces in the Middlesborough area are now operating. During the current month no contract was reported at the east coast, Scotland or Clyde shipbuilding yards, and launchings from the latter of a total of nine vessels of 1800 tons, give the poorest August output on record.

LONDON MARKET NOT AFFECTED BY FRESH EUROPEAN CRISIS

By Cable from Monitor Bureau . LONDON, Sept. 1-The serious outlook in international politics has failed to influence the stock exchange adversely and the general tone has remained good. The volume of business on the whole is small, the markets still being under the holiday influences. Broadly speaking, speculative issues re more in favor than others. Oils ere maintained, and in some instances improved on the gains made, last week.

PHILIPPINE SUGAR PROSPECTS

MANILA (By Mail)-Practically complete returns from Philippine sugar mills show a total crop of 230,000 metric tons of centrifugal sugar and 30,000 of muscovado sugar. The prospects for rext season continue bright, and, bar-ring the unforseen, a record crop is in sight.

The coal miners received 2½ per cent to 20 per cent increases in six districts, while blast furnacemen benefited 3½ to 14½ per cent. Dockmen and railway workers experienced decreases because of agreements to accpt scaling, according to the cost of living index.

way workers experienced decreases because of agreements to accpt scaling, according to the cost of living index. The textile finishing trades also witnessed slight wage cuts.

Wages for 1923 have so far declined, the cuts totaling £490,000 for 3,300,000 amployees, compared with increases of £280,000 for 1,050,000. In the corresponding months of 1922 the net reduction was £3,200,000.

The strike is largely responsible for the heavy fall of July imports.

The strike has been distinctly unpopular with the public, because it represents the repudiation of an agreement made not only by union leaders but ratified by a membership vote.

An ever increasing number of students are adopting the plan of crowding two days' work, one educational and the other industrial, into each 24 hours.

Certain faculty members maintain that the university should prohibit so much work on the part of any student. They claim that the combination of a full college schedule with a full laboring day means 16 hours of work for the students, with a consequent dwarfing of social development, and lowering of the quality of achievement in both fields. Other faculty members and many of the students say that the records made by men working a complete shift do not substantiate these complaints; and that if student shows himself canable of maintaining the standards required both on the job and in the classroom, it is his own business whether his day is 8 or 16 hours long.

Up to this time, the university authorities, except in one college, have not interfered in the matter. If the student working a full shift showed himself incapable of maintaining the required scholastic standing, he was automatically given the choice of lessening his load, either in the classroom or in the factory. Generally, under circumstances, he has shared his factory job with some other student, each working alternate nights.

The Owls Club Not only is the faculty of the university giving serious thought to the problem, but the students who find it necessary to work an eight-hour shift are giving it consideration. Such students have recently organized a club To be eligible called "The Owls." for membership in the organization, students must have received credit for at least 72 hours of standard college studies; their scholastic standing must be above the general average of that for the entire student body; they must have worked for three years daily eight-hour shift or its equivalent in a factory, and they must have taken a reasonable part in extracurriculum ac Mes. Seven students—Jacob V. Naur e. Ross Brown, Robert Hall, James Singer, Raymond J. Steel, Paul Stevens, and Peral Vanica—have already met these requirements. As set forth by its members, the purpose of "The Owls" is fourfold: to bring together students who find it necessary to work a complete shift while attending the university, for the purpose of discussing the various problems arising from the arrangeschool and work hours; give advice to all those students who must support themselves; to discourage students who are not forced to do so from working, and to give due recognition to the achievement of students who successfully combine a maximum load of labor and study. During the last semester, studentlabor members of the organization have won the major share of university honors. In a graduating class of 84 seniors, Mr. Naugle's scholastic standing won him a place as one of four honor students. First prize in the annual oratorical contest open to all junior students went to Mr. Brown. Mr. Steel won first prize in the an-nual essay contest, to which all stu-and trees which surround them, and dents except freshmen are eligible.

One Man's Experience

Mr. Naugle, besides attaining an average grade of almost 90 per cent in four years of college study, was rated as one of the best men on the flying squadron of the largest rubber factory in the world. The flying squadron is a group of men chosen for their ability to do almost all jobs in the factory. To fill a gap caused by an emergency in any department of the factory organization is their duty. During his undergraduate years, Naugle's participation in extracurriculum activities included the winning of the junior class oratorical contest and second place in the sophomore oratorical contest. As a senior, he served on the student council, the self-government body of the students.

To have attained the degree of Bachelor of Arts with honors in four years, to have participated to a considerable degree in campus activities, and to have labored eight hours each day, Mr. Naugle seems to consider not a remarkable achievement. By adhering to a regular schedule of living, he says that he has been able to allot his time in such a manner as to obtain enough sleep, a fair amount of recreation and definite study hours.

"Any success I may have attained in combining labor with study I attribute to regular habits of living," he said. "To begin with, I saw to it that my sleep came in regular amounts and at regular intervals. During the first three years, I slept six hours each night. In my senior year, I was able to get seven hours I won the extra hour by learning to cut down, by greater concentration, the amount of time required for studying. I reserved Saturday afternoons and Sundays for my charity from either. There is, too, the type of college instructor who says to himself, "That student cannot do both jobs thoroughly.' Then he proves himself right by failing the student whether he deserves the failure or not. Another type of instructor says to himself, 'Poor fellow; I'll help him along.' Too often he does so by giving the student a higher grade than he has earned. Both types do the student an injustice. The studentworker should try to prevent the growth of the same attitudes in the industrial authorities.

"How much outside work a student does should be an individual matter with him, and should not be the occasion for interference by university faculties," Mr. Naugle said. "If the "If the student cannot meet the scholastic requirements of the university he should be expelled; if he cannot meet the requirements of the industry he should be discharged from his job. He should expect and receive no favors from either source. If, however, he meets all requirements on both sides successfully, there exists no fair reason for penalizing him.

"My outside work has taught me truths as valuable as any that I have learned in the classroom. I have gained knowledge of men and of the value and dignity of labor. Because I have come to know men, I have learned the most vital lesson of lifetolerance. With that lesson at heart, have been able to overcome the disadvantage under which most college men work in industry-an unbearable attitude of cockiness, of intellectual and social superiority over the men with whom they labor.'

A Professor's Findings

In a report based on a rather extensive study of the industrial worker as a college student, Prof. Charles Bulger of the university faculty says: Initiative, perseverance and confidence in himself must be his to a high degree. Knowing how to work hard at what he undertakes, he is reliable. men to gain his desires. These are determining his future success,

'It is a compliment to the working student that so little attention has been given him. He is abundantly capable of taking care of himself."

In spite of what Professor Bulger says, and in spite of the success of individual students in combining eight hours of labor with complete college sity have gone on record as favoring culties a rule forbidding the combination except in special cases. One college of the university, in fact, has passed regulations requiring an extra year of resident study for students who are working an eight-hour shift and who are candidates for a degree. quickened not merely through access to the intelligence of the teacher, but Modern Ignorance, by direct communication with the greatest authorities, implies reading. This is done to little children and by older pupils, for though not always realizable, owing to practical econo-mies in schools, the ideal of the union is "One child, one book," and group systems and modifications on the lines of the Dalton experiments often make this possible where otherwise expense might be a preventive. Personal reading implies knowledge of the form of words and right spelling and punctuation through familiarity with them and not through mechanical teaching of these as separate class lessons And the creed goes on: "One book, one reading, one telling." The child reads once, and then retells the matter in oral narration to his teacher, thereby revealing and perfecting his vocabulary, making the knowledge of one has looked in vain. the matter his very own, and perforce "thinking over" and receiving or rejecting the idea conveyed by author. DUCATION accomplishes wonders. Take China for an example. Twenty years ago modern education, in the western conception of the word, was scarcely known in China. Of course, there were litterati, who, however, were ignorant in every other way except economics, linguistics, archæology, their books and classics. Systematic scholarship and medicine-"the higher education of the young, such as we find among our schools and academies and colleges, was sadly neglected.

And today: a brilliant Chinese delegation to the World Conference on Education, recently held in San Francisco, presented, through Dr. Ping-wen Kuo, who did his graduate study at Columbia University, a plan for a world organization of educators, which was favorably reported and adopted by the delegations of 60 nations, including but a system of lectures and courses those of the United States, England of such general scope as to lead stu- France and Japan. Reactions of a Reader

"THE Back Seat," by G. B. Stern (New York: A. A. Knopf), brings rushing memories of the play "Enter Madame" and of Anne Douglas Sedgwick's admirable novel, "Tanta" Anyone who has awar trailed. "Tante." Anyone who has ever trailed along in the entourage of a great actress—such an actress, say, as Ellen Terry—at once nods acquiescence. In deep and finished as cameos, yet trefact, Leonora Carruthers, like "a mendously more sympathetic. chestnut tree flaming against October's bluest sky," possesses many traits in common with Miss Terry: her winning common with Miss Terry: her winning charm and simplicity and joy, her expansive generosity and friendliness. The book is staccato, to suit the tempo of the household. An evening's entertainment, never indeed pretending to be more, it is unusually delectable

It all happened because Faith dropped the teapot and had to fetch a fresh brew. Then, as in "The House That Jack Built," one circumstance followed hard upon the heels of another: Leonora had no time to rehearse Act I of Pat Ormond's new play, so Faith was pressed into service: whereupon Faith appeared so exactly Pat's heroine that he quite forgot he had written the part for her mother. Then the opening night— Faith's début—and her mother's 25 minutes of intensified coaching which saved the girl's professional reputa-tion. Fortunately, Pat had fallen in love with Faith, and out of love with Leonora; so Faith was induced to desert public life. But all this had not been too easy for Leonora, nor for "Dear old Robert," Faith's father who stayed at home and occupied "the back seat" while his wife went forth to conquer the world. He tried, oh, so desperately! to convince Leonora that the back seat is really rather pleasant, once a person is accustomed to it; and she wanted to believe him, too, or thought she did. But actresses are not designed for back seats, and Leonora found the effort too severe a test for heavy the property of the pr test for her pride; she knew she might still claim years of popularity, and when Faith renounced her public laurels her mother serenely rescued the letter which would have canceled an American tour. So everything, presumably, went on as before. Mean-while, Robert, the ineffectual but the deliciously understanding, returned to his amateur carpentry, one eye on "the shelfless corner of the wall nearest the door," which up to the moment had received no mark of his favor. 4 4

Mr. Knopf occasionally drops out altogether those startling end papers with which he often delights to equip his books, though he usually balsinces a stainless white lining with a correspondingly vivid cover. As in the latest novel by Carl Van Vechten, enticingly decked out in a bold pattern of red and grass green, as lurid as the subject matter within. And, in connection with this book, the pubconnection with this book, the publisher had a distinctly new sensation in store for his public. For he reduced punctuation almost to the vanishing point. Whatever the motive, its effect is most disconcerting. You've no notion the odd things that can occur to a person who tries to year aloud from this book. read aloud from this book. 4 4 4

In the guise of an ungainly tutor, Samuel Johnson hulks in the background of John Buchan's new swash-buckling adventure tale, "Midwinter" (New York: George H. Doran Company), written around the invasion of England by the Young Pretender.

Johnsonians will grieve that the familiar lumbering, yet pungent, wisdom of the Doctor's later days is not so much as glimpsed in embryo. But it is a daring thing which Mr. Buchan has attempted, to fill in with an imag. inary episode certain obscure years of Dr. Johnson's life; and to have put too many speeches into his mouth would have increased the dangers of the task. For it must be said that Mr. Buchan has not the imitative skill of Mr. R. M. Freeman, as displayed in "The New Boswell."

+ + + Things astounding have a way of transpiring in that quasi-mythical re-gion, the middle west. Apparently there is now a furore for the collecting of rare books. New York booksellers, so we hear, are shipping great parcels of their treasures—association copies, others in sober original boards, still more in costly tooled bindings— to dealers in western cities, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, and the dear knows where beside. They offer unlimited eredit, with no questions asked. Which proves that something must be in the air. Moreover, these western dealers have discovered a most important fact: that rare books should be displayed and sold as precious gems. One at a time and among precisely the right surroundings. At east one dealer is building on an addition to his shop, designed to house his rare books. Who knows? Circumstances may so alter the case that Mr. Sinclair Lewis will presently view his middle was ful spectacles. his middle west through more color-

But now we are told, by Simon Pure, in the current number of The Bookman, of some English writers who have to quit London in order to finish their tasks. St. John Ervine, for example, has gone to Devon; Arnold Bennett is aboard his yacht; Compton Mackenzie has permanently deserted England, and it is said that J. D. Beresford may do the same. Americans cannot write in New York; the English cannot write in London. Everyone, it seems, wants to do his writing in some other corner than that in which he finds himself.

among the masses, as I see it.
"That singer who takes on tour a program he would not present either in New York or London makes a serions mistake, because the present-day music clubs are too well informed on what is being sung and played everywhere to tolerate imposition from an itinerant artist offering less than his or her best numbers.

Mr. Barclay notes an active American demand for British folk songs. He told of the pleasure he has derived from his recital work in association with Arthur Whiting, whose arrangements of folk songs he has sung. The English singer said he has not yet dared to do Negro spirituals, which are so beautifully, as he holds, rendered by his colleagues in song. "For the present, at least," he modestly remarked, "I shall stick to those things I have been brought up on.

much of the theater is made: a large percentage of romance, reinforced by heroics on one side, in conflict with just enough villainy and gun play of the not-too-realistic sort on the other; a goodly portion of artificiality, much swagger and braggadocio, and a few this is played in front of an "along the lower Mississippi" background. Mr. Tarkington has dropped for the moment the saccharine and Pollyanna motives and in their place we find satire and flamboyancy. The satirical pen is often a dangerous one to wield but not when held in the hand of the gentle Booth Tarkington. The author of "Magnolia" does not expect us to of what we see. We are invited to ride on the very crest of the froth of the wave of his story. If we take the play more seriously than that we miss much of its dance.

The Wharf Players of Provincetown

PROVINCETOWN, Mass., Aug. 31 (Special Correspondence) - The newlyorganized Wharf Players of Provincetown gave their first bill of American one-act plays last evening to an audience of 600 that applauded heartily and even cheered.

"Don Juan in a Garden," by Harry Kemp, author of "Tramping on Life," was most effectively set by William Zorach, chief of the Provincetown modernist painters. Frances Paine Park and Frances Hyde, formerly of the Washington Square Players and now of the Provincetown Players; Fern Forrester Shay, fashion artist, and Kennard McClees of the Masquers of Stamford, presented the play with professional poise and precision.

In Booth Tarkington's comedy "The

was the degradation of subject that brought about the revolt against the subject picture inevitably suggests the Royal Academy during Victoria's long reign, its walls covered with little wiggling anecdotes, sentimental episodes, manufactured scenes from history, classical dramas, medieval dates-painting after painting in which the painter had no other end than to tell a story.

It would be hard for the younger generation to realize the childishness, the banality, the artlessness to which British art stooped in those days, when the so-called subject picture was the fashion.

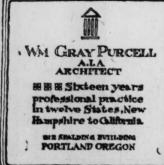

Now, if these stories had been told in legitimate terms of art, there would have been no fault to find. Velásquez painted battle pictures; Titian borrowed subects from mythology; to the Dutch masters the card party, the chase and the tavern provided motives much in favor. But the Victorian story-tellers forgot their art in their preoccupation with their story, and, during the '70s and '80s especially, nothing else counted. It was the painter who did not tell a story who was the outsider, the pariah. However, as always, there were exceptions. Some of the most dis-tinguished English artists of the Victorian period told their stories with the rest, and explored the past and literature as diligently to capture them. The Pre-Raphaelites were insatiable story-teliers, above all, in their early days. To recall their most famous paintings is to be impressed by their love of subject and their de-pendence upon it—Rossetti painting the "Annunciation," "Dante's Dream," "Lady Lilitt"; Millais wandering from "The Carpenter's Shop" to "Ophelia," "Mariana," "St. Bartholomew's Eve"; "Mariana," "St. Bartholomew's Eve"; Holman Hunt busy with "The Hireling Shepherd," "The Lady of Shalott," "The Scapegoat." There is hardly a picture on the list of the many they painted in their first proselytizing ardor for which a story was not virtually the incentive. And so it was with the men whose names are was with the men whose names are Brown of the older generation, Sandys, their contemporary, and Burne-Jones and Waterhouse, their followers. + + + was a difference which raised their attempt to find a picture ready-made stories to a higher plane than the anecdotes of the academic masters.

The Pre-Raphaelites gave first place to the art with which their theme was carried out. One can criticize their pictures in detail—for the self-conscious virtue and overelaboration of Holman Hunt, the tendency to flam-boyant ornament of Rossetti, the commonplace of Millais, increasing more and more as he drifted further from

And, at their best, they brought a passionate intensity to their work that there is no resisting, as in Millais' painting of the "Blind Girl" and the "Children Burning Autumn Leaves," less well known than some of those later can vases in which he descended to the fashionable level and almost ruined his reputation. Or there is a fervent striving after color which makes perhaps even a stronger appeal, as in a number of Rossetti's water colors and a few of Burne-Jones', all telling stories which one forgets altogether for the rich or tender harmonies of

Yet the rank and file of those who wield a paintbrush know little of such subtleties!

He was weary of the sobriety of drab interiors in an age when his national academy was clothed in sackcloth, sackcloth in an age when his national academy was clothed in sackcloth, sackcloth a turn for respectability. He longed for the open, for the turbulence of life and of color. He began to travel, believing that the inspiration of foreign skies might lend vision to his brush work. He traveled to Holland, Germany, Vienna and to Italy, and he returned with a passionate admiration for Titian.

The subject which inspired his first series of masterpieces was, however, not drawn from what he had seen abroad. Manet and his friends, Astruc. Baudelaire and Théophile Gautier used to go to a small café chantant where a Spanish troupe of dancers beguiled the evening hours of the visitors. It was Don Camprubi's troupe, among whom was Lola de Provence, whom Manet painted on several occasions, which stirred his imagination. Spanish costume gave him the strong contrasts of color which he loved, black with touches of yellow, red sashes and blue ribbons.

On the other hand, the "Villa à Rueil' does not obtrude its material perfection. The picture shows a house in the background shaded by trees, and as Mr. Meier-Graefe once said of it, the picture is nothing but the shim-mer of a house between the shimmer of trees. "Argenteuil" is a view across the Seine. In the foreground a lady with her child watches the swaying of some boats in the iridescent water. In the distance the golden haze on a row of trees melts into a sky which defies all description. This is a picture which will outlive the fame of what the French call Manet's "firandes pièces," like "Le Bon Bock." J. HOLROYD-REECE

OWN through the years when Colonial spinning and weaving were in use and the early textile inventions were being made, the voice of the Saco's turbulent waters as they tumbled in precipitous glee over rocks and boulders sent forth its challenge to men of brain and brawn, and many answered. As early as 1650, Roger Spencer, a prominent business man of the town, had a saw-mill in Biddeford. All traces of these early industries have vanished. On the site now occupied by the York National Bank of Saco, were found not long ago the remains of an old garrison house erected by SIR WILLIAM PEPPERELL and two business associates for the protection of their mills. Both garrison and mills have long since crumbled in ruins. The humble industrial plants of those early settlers have given place to great modern manufactories. Where the "old stone fort" once stood on the bank of the Saco in Biddeford, are now located some of the mills of the PEPPERELL MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

This immense plant now extends over more than ten acres in the business centre of Biddeford. It manufactures more than 50,000,000 yards of cloth each year, and is the largest producer of sheets, sheeting, pillow cases and tubing in the world.

PEPPERELL PRODUCTS SOLD THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

N China and far-away India PEPPERELL products are famous. Why does the intelligent American housewife who understands the texture of goods, pick out the PEPPERELL products when she is selecting her sheets and pillow cases? Because the sheeting, sheets, pillow cases and tubings which bear the PEPPERELL label have been the standard for more than 60 years. They are sold under that label alone, and are so made that for the cost they are the most serviceable and best appearing of any on the market. Owing to the superior grade of cotton used and to the number of threads woven to the square inch, PEPPERELL goods are most flexible, stand up best under the wear of hard laundering, and yet are light and easy to wash. They keep their whiteness. In every respect PEPPERELL products meet the desires of the fastidious housekeeper. They are appropriate in houses of taste and refinement, where a well-made bed with snow-white sheets and pillow cases is as essential as a correctly set table with its fine linen and silver; and yet they stand up and give perfect satisfaction under the exacting requirements of hospital, sleeping car and hotel uses. PEPPERELL has been a standard family sheeting for over two generations. Its low cost, attractive appearance, and great wearing qualities make it the greatest bargain of them all.

Ancient Pemaquid: a New England Beginning the way for all who followed to these wilderness shores.

The Plymouth Colony has become traditionally known and is rightfully accepted as the first permanent settle-ment in New England. It marks the beginnings of the struggle to transplant the civilization of Europe to the wilderness of the New World, with the added purpose of securing freedom to worship God according to conscience, apart from the constricting bigotry and formalism of the established

4 4 4 From that first settlement which gained so precarious a foothold at Plymouth, and from others soon after established along Massachusetts Bay, flowed the currents which, in a greater degree than any other influ-ences, have shaped the character and destiny of the great Republic of the Yet, without detracting in the least from the importance and extent of the efforts of the Pilgrims, it is justifiable to examine the history of other settlements on this rugged coast to learn if, perchance, there were other pilgrims, perhaps equally hardy, who, to advance the cause of civilization, braved a life in the wilderness, separated by a wide ocean from home and friends.

I recall, as a lad, reading in the school history of that day, that in the starving time at Plymouth, a friendly Indian, Samoset by name, came out of the woods and said to the astonished colonists, "Welcome, Englishman." It was a wonder to me how it was possible for an Indian at that early day to speak in English. The school history contained no ac-count of another settlement along the coast north of Jamestown; nor did it explain how an Indian, by any possibility, could have had acquaintance with white men sufficient to enable him to learn their language. Virginia was a long way from Cape Cod. reckoned in terms of travel through the wilderness on foot, or by canoe along the shore. But there was the fact, plainly recorded in the history, and no doubt of its authenticity ever arose with me. Not until long afterward was the mystery explained, when it was learned that years before the Pilgrims landed annual visits were made by daring adventurers, explorers, fishers and traders to the coast to the east of Plymouth, and at one or more points settlements were established.

+ + Authentic history now records an early settlement on the coast of Maine at Pemaguid, a point between Port-land and Rockland, several miles east of the Kennebec River. There on a rocky peninsula, at the mouth of the Pemaquid River, a post was estab-lished at an early date. It is be-lieved by many that even before Pop-ham began his unsuccessful attempt at colonization on the Kennebec, a beginning had been made at Pema-

So New England is justified after appeals. A notice to the effect that up to this year more than 100,000 people have visited the house, and vet not one exhibit has ever been stolen, and nothing has ever been in any way harmed or mutilated goes to prove, too, the respect with which the house has been treated.

I must confess I received something of a shock when I read on the parlor door a placard that "the poet Longfellow was brot here when he was about eight months old." It seems a bit disrespectful to use simplified spelling in giving biographical details of Henry W. Longfellow, and in put-ting the card on the door of a small room—the largest parlor in Portland, however, when it was built in 1786, containing the only plano in town at the time-so fraught with memories of the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, and still furnished as it was in those days. It may have been my imagination, but I fancied the poet's head nodded sadly at my whispered inquiry of his statue in the corner if he really objected.

"You bet not!" agreed Mother.

Inspiration From a Sofa

This couple, together with several ther people visiting the house, were delegates to one of the many conventions always being held in Portland. As another man and his wife—members of the same group—sank with sighs of satisfaction to a sofa in the living room, the man remarked, "There, perhaps we'll get some inspiration here!" Then, with closed cyes and a rapt expression, he added, "To think Henry Wadsworth Longfel-

Yet further attempts will be made to set the matter beyond all possible doubt. The corona, the "crown," which encircles the sun, will receive particular attention. The inof the coronal light will be measured photographically and with photo-electric cells. Its heat will be determined and the amount of polarization measured. Spectrographs and other apparatus will show the direc-tion and speed of rotation. Then, the omposition of the corona is important. Helium, first found by means of the yellow line in the corona spectrum, is now known terrestrially and can be used to float our airships. Another mysterious line in the spectrum of the corona shows an unknown element which is called "coronium." Whether or represents helium or hydrogen masquerading under unknown atomic influences is a question appealing for solution. Indeed ,the appropriate form for the corona would seem to be an interrogation point.

DON STURZO REAPPEARS TO DISTURB ITALIAN PREMIER

Former Popular Party Leader Emerging From Retirement Causes Uneasiness in Ranks of Fascismo

ROME, Aug. 7 (Special Correspondence)-Don Sturzo, formerly official head of the Popular Party, has returned to Rome from his retreat at Monte Cassino. His coming occasions anew the wrath of Fascismo against him. It transpires that his reappearance here is due to an acute crisis within the ranks of the Catholic Party. He has attempted once more to unite his followers around the Centrist group, and without success. His Left wing, headed by Miglioli, is recalcitrant. Some of his most important leaders of the Right have withdrawn, while others have been expelled.

The Left wing of the Popular Party has been for war to the death against Fascismo. The Right has stood for full-hearted co-operation with Mus solini. The Center has favored co-operation with the Fascist Government, but on a strongly independent has is popular three forces. basis. Don Sturzo stands, therefore, with the small Center group, abandoned by the Vatican and surrounded by multitudes of implacable political enemies, eager to be in at the killing.

Forced Resignation There is no doubt that his resignation as leader of the Popular Party was forced by the Vatican. There is no doubt that his return to the political arens in Rome at this time is. on the other hand, displeasing to the on the other hand, displeasing to the Vatican. This would appear to indicate that he himself is in a moral crisis. There is even a rumor that he contemplates putting off his priestly

The Vatican authorities ordered him to eliminate himself, for the time being at least. He did so. But he has deep convictions as to his mission. He has felt himself called to be a leader of the masses, a political leader for religious ends.

Few Stand By

Only the other day Don Sturzo was all-powerful at Montecitorio. Benedict XV was behind him. Nitti. Giolitti, Bonomi could not do without him. He had built up a powerful political machine. Today he is an outcast, deserted by all but a faithful few.

As leader of his small Centrist group, he has no chance, In a proc-lamation issued by the Grand Na-tional Council of Fascismo occurs the following:

While the majority of the Nation is serdently and undeniably with us, it is imperative that our party should recognize the necessity of discipline. Great is the responsibility we have assumed in seizing the power. This must never be forgotten. The present paralysis of the opposition must not weaken the compativeness of the Fascist. The masks that are failing reveal to us the features of other evenies. The Sicilian features of other esemies. The Sicilian priest [Don Sturzo] and the party which he leads must be considered as enemies of the Government and of

Party platform. Attempt to Shift tried to shift to another basis. In that moment, the liberalism of the country was manifestly restless un-der the restrictions of Fascismo. Don Sturzo threw out his challenge to Mussolini for a constitutional regime. For a few weeks it looked as if he might become the leader of the con-stitutional forces against the revo-lutionary forces of Fascismo.

There was a considerable movement throughout the country toward him. But his religious fanaticism was too much in evidence. While he talked constitution and democracy, he moved steadily toward a Catholic tyranny The country became convinced that Don Sturzo could never be an ex-ponent of the Liberalism of the Risor-Don Sturzo

Choice of Leaders

While, then, Mussolini recognized the pre-eminent position of Roman Catholicism as the religion of the country, he always placed the first emphasis on the State. In this he followed substantially the policy of Cavour and other historic political leaders. He has shown, too, a certain deference to the parliamentary Right, which through the last 50 years has represented Italian Liberalism.

So of late the country has more and more felt its freedom safer in the hands of Mussolini than it would be in the control of Don Sturzo, however oppressive Mussolini's dictatorship may seem. If Don Sturzo had been a true Liberal, he would have had a fair chance, doubtless, to make head-way against Fascismo. But Mussolini way against Pascismo. But Mussolini has made him appear as a reactionary, and has induced the country to believe that the sincere preserver of the Liberalism of the Risorgimento is him-

So much for Denmark's historical and cultural rights to Greenland. Now as to the scientific. All Greenland has been explored and mapped by Danes, Aug. 24, 1923.

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

In a special correspondence article, published July 25, and in an editorial of Aug. 1, The Christian Science Monitor has dealt with the Greenland issue between Denmark and Norway in a way that seems somewhat one-sided.

The first colonization of Greenland, leelandic rather than Norwegian, ended about 500 years ago, and the only traces left of it are the ruins of the old settlements. The second colonization which started in 1721 was due to the religious zeal of the missionary, Hans Poulsen

MUSIC OF THE WORLD

De Falla Talks of His New Work splendid subject in my mind, but I cannot talk about it yet; it isn't definite enough. What I know is that it is Based on a Don Quixote Theme splendid. It will be absolutely necessary for us to produce some scenic work together, a short one say in the splendid.

By G. JEAN-AUBRY Paris, Aug. 17

Special Correspondence
OCOMPOSER in Europe, at the present time, represents his country more completely than Manuel de Falla represents Spain; and Manuel de Falla represents Spain; and performers."

I am going to show you what it is, something."

And I left him at the door, returning toward the center of Paris and wondering whether this referred to that symphonic work on Granada, "The Marvelous City," which he menyet there are few countries where the mate and scenery are more marked than there. Manuel de Falla's music brings out in turn all these various aspects, and it is, therefore, all the more truly and strikingly Spanish. On the present occasion, I met Manuel de Falla in Paris, on his way back from Venice and Rome. It was his first visit to Italy and he came back altogether enchanted and charmed, especially with regard to Venice and the fasci-nation he felt where the Italian and Spanish characteristics came in con-

In the silent retirement of a friend's house, situated at the bottom of a garden, in the peaceful Auteuil, Falla talked with vivacity, sometimes almost vithout expression on his face-which is not unlike the face of an easy-going Chinese philosopher—while at other times his features contract and give way to a genuine, almost childish laugh, unless he assumes an affected dignity which is highly amusing. I knew Falla over 15 years ago in France, where he lived for a long time. We spent many days together in London on a number of occasions. Now he has returned from Italy, but all the same he remains truly and solely a Spaniard—a Spaniard of An-dalusia. These are his own words:

Memories of the South

"My dear friend, what a marvel nice is! How in some respects it resembles Seville . . . It will be necessary for us to produce something together, some play taking place in Italy or in Spain, as it often was the case with the comedies of the seven-teenth and eighteenth centuries. We must work that out together . . . but you now want to see my new work, 'El Retablo de Maese Pedro.' I know you thought I should never finish it. Anyhow, you thought it would be a matter of another two years. Well, it's done, and you will hear it in a fortnight at Princess de Polignac's

'This is what it is about. You remember that passage in Don Quixote where, in an inn, Master Peter is giving a marionette performance. Among the spectators we find Don Quixote and Sancho Panza. A young child calls out, as the show goes on, the items of the story acted on the tiny stage.

"The subject of the plot is the release hand flon Gayferos. We see, in turn, Gayferos and Roland engaged in a game of draughts, then Charlemagne, who comes to reproach Gayferos with idle thoughts while his wife is a capzar of Sansuenna, absorbed in dreamy thoughts about Paris and her husband.

pursuit of the fugitives.
"You will remember that at that moment, the child who starts the performance, says: 'I very much fear they will be overtaken and brought back tied to the tail of their own Then Don Quixote, hearing words, rises, unsheaths his aword and rushes upon the marion-ettes, as if they were a real battalion of soldiers. Neither the shouts of the audience nor those of Master Peter his arm. He is not satisfied aintil he has smashed everything to pieces, and then he gives expression to his love for Dulcinea by a song in honor of knight-errantry and the knights who have won glory in it. fter this hymn of praise the curtain is brought down.

This represents my orchestra. I have reduced it as much as ssible, while trying to use it to the hest advantage."

"Have you used any themes of the Cervantes period?" I asked the com-

"No, before writing, I saturated myself in the music of the Cervantes period and I also studied the scales used in the music which, in Spain, preceded Cervantes; because you must preceded Cervantes; because you must remember that when Cervantes wrote Don Quixote, knight-errantry had already become a thing of the past, and, therefore, it is to previous centuries that the great Spanish composer is referring in his immortal masterplece. Except in one or two themes. I have a processor to the past of the past themes. I have not made any exact use of anything. I did not want to produce a scholarly work, but a living creation. My object has been to suggest the atmosphere of the various scenes in such manner as to convey to the audience the impression of the

Manuel de Falla's voice when he sings does not disprove the popular expression, "a composer's voice." It is, in fact, a strange rule, with very few exceptions, that composers have no voices. But if his voice is almost devoid of sonority, it nevertheless gives you a correct feeling of the different expressions and the pianist fully makes up for the singer. Manuel de Falla, with his orchestra score, directly adapted his work to the plane with wonderful skill and with that life, color and sensitiveness which are found in all his works known to us, and perhaps still more so in this one.

A Manuscript Rehearsal

Of course, the piano alone cannot produce every effect, even if a joint attempt were made (in fact, at one moment I had to perform at the bass of the piano the part of a drum, a performance for which Falla congratulated me afterward with affectionate sarcasm and about which I shall be chaffed for a long time), but all the same, it enables one to form an idea of the merits of this new work by the great Spanish composer.

We walked, in the night, arm in arm along the avenues in Auteuil, along which 10 years before we had been pacing together when we were both living in Paris, instead of one inhabiting Granada and the other London, and we were both almost equally unknown, notwithstanding all the ad-miration I felt for Manuel de Falla and which I was trying to impart to my friends. A fortnight later, again my friends. A fortnight later, again at night time, we were walking along the Trocadero near Passy, each of us carrying half the orchestral parts of "Retablo," which was performed that very evening for the first time at Madame de Polignac's house, before an audience of 200 persons, consisting of composers, writers, society people, all delighted with his work, who gave the composer a true ovation.

"You see," said Manuel de Falla to me, "that in the 'Retablo' there is nothing southern: everything is Castilian, excepting the first part of the finalee, which is based on a Catalonian theme. It is as completely Castilian in character as the 'Three-Cornered Hat' is Andalusian, and 'Amor Brujo is Gitano. Now, then, do you like it? The "Pilgrimage" of a Famous Singer

N the prologue to "Singer's Pilgrim age" (Grant Richards, London: 18s. and Small Maynard & Co., Boston, Mass., $4 net). Mme. Blanche Marchesi explains how, one by one, her fears and doubts had to crushed by "the man who thought of it" before she could be induced to face the public as a writer. She suspected that what she had written would haps stir up sentiments not all good ion.

Manual Garcia, père et fils, were the founders of a great singing school, and when Wagner wanted his niece to have lessons in voice production he sent her to Garcia, fils, in London. In letters "Wagner had expressed his opinion that the Italian singing method was the best, that in Germany they could not sing, they ruined his works, and that the Wagner operas should be sung in the method of the great old Italian opera-that is, with style, feeling, pronunciation, dramatic instinct, and with complete mastery of voice technique. 'And this is the reason, dear master,' concluded Wagner in one of his letter, 'that I sent my niece Johanna, who is dear to me, to you." Is Music a Necessary Study for the Child?

OVER 80% of the colleges of the United States are allowing credits for the study of music. This is a significant fact: it means that educators class music with educational subjects. Music is logic, eloquence, poetry, art and science. Like mathematics, music is governed by laws of exact science. Also as in mathematics, no special talent is necessary to acquire a knowledge of these governing laws, and this knowledge is a practical asset in life. This is why educators recognize music especially fit for study.

D o not consider money spent for music instruction unwisely spent This is true only when the teaching or the system of study is not correct. Bear in mind two things—the method of instruction and the teacher; for money is indeed thrown away on poor teaching and no system. Thoroughly investigate the mode of instruction.

THE PROGRESSIVE SERIES OF PIANO LESSONS

is a system based on absolute principles. Our teachers are thoroughly trained and are to be found in most towns of the United States, and the principal cities of other countries. They have taught tens of thousands of students who, for the most part, are able to bear the severest tests of musicianship. We invite investigation.

THE very fact, apparently agreed upon by most of the newspapers today, that the assault of the Italian fleet upon the Greek island of Corfu

Can Italian Aggression Be Curbed? will not in all probability lead to a European war, explains that precipitate and unwarrantable attack. For it is perfectly evident that the spectacle of disunion presented by the Allies in the face of the Turkish demands has encouraged Italy to embark on its present piratical adventure. The Turks, having cast their lot with the defeated party in the World War and suffered themselves an exemplary defeat, have nevertheless been able, as a result of bickerings among the Allies, to recover all they had lost, and more than they could have hoped to have gained had they been victorious in the actual war. The Italians, observing this fact, are seeking to profit by adopt-

No practiced observer who recalls the circumstances under which Italy entered the war in 1915, and who is familiar with the series of trades offered by each of the belligerents in that struggle, has ever questioned the fact that the Italians entered the war as a purely business proposition. They made little effort to gloss over their action with the ethical or moral explanations which were somewhat glibly forthcoming from other participants. They went in expecting to get southern Tyrol, the port of Adalia, a foothold in Asia Minor, and the Dodecanese. When the division of the spoils was made they received southern Tyrol and a portion of Dalmatia, but none of the Dodecanese, except a promise that their claim to Rhodes might be subjected to a plebiscite. Fiume they held for a time through D'Annunzio's adventure, but their foothold in the Dodecanese was not in any way strengthened. They saw Corsica and Tunis held by France, and Malta by Great Britain, and there is among Italians a general feeling that had they thrown their lot with Germany and won, these three provinces would have been theirs. It is probable that it was the menace of internal revolution, which engaged the best efforts of Italian statesmen at the time the treaties were in making, that prevented their securing more for their country than they did. Now that that revolution has been accomplished by the lawless and apparently satisfactory seizure of the Government by the Fascisti under Mussolini it is the evident purpose of Italy to make good by force of arms what it lost at the council table. The demand upon Greece was evidently made with no expectation of an acceptable reply. The Italian guns at Corfu spoke the message of predetermined conquest.

There is, furthermore, and long has been, in the minds of Italians, a certain resentment over the predominance of Great Britain and France in the Mediterranean. They claim that above all great powers their own should be dominant in the sea which in a broad sense borders three sides of their peninsula. The seizure of Corfu, if made permanent, will transform the Adriatic into an Italian lake, and if as a result of success in that direction the Italians seek further conquest in the region of the Dodecanese, the power of Great Britain in the Mediterranean, and particularly the route to the Suez Canal, will be seriously menaced. Indeed, the adventure upon which Italy has embarked, with a precipitancy that recalls everywhere the Austrian assault upon Serbia, is so distinctly antag onistic to the interests of Great Britain and France that it would hardly seem that, even under the present conditions in which the power of each of these nations is crippled, they can afford to let it pass unchallenged.

Elsewhere in the Monitor appears a discussion of the method by which this action may be brought withinthe purview of the League of Nations. Unless that organization shall confess to entire impotence, it should be able to check further Italian aggression for three months, but whether it can expel the Italian forces from Corfu is a debatable question. The interests of the United States in the controversy are simply those of a nation desirous of peace in Europe, and recognizing the fact that only by the maintenance of peace and the progress of stabilization in European countries can its own business prosperity be fully restored. The United States is not a member of the League of Nations, and can have nothing to say as to the action to be taken by that body. But it would seem that there may be a certain lever that might be employed by the United States and Great Britain acting together in the fact that Italy owes to those two nations $4,500,000,000, of which $1,932,715,485 is to the United States alone. In the past it has been demonstrated, unhappily, that nations can always find money for a war of conquest, even though they are unable to defray the cost of needed internal improvements, and particularly to pay interest on their debts. Possibly this may be the moment at which this historically established fact may be overthrown. Without attempting to define the extent to which Greece is being victimized in this assault, it may be said without qualification that the action of Italy is so menacing to the peace of the world, so obstructive to that return to normal for which the whole world is eager, that any steps which could be taken to check it, either through the League, or by joint action of the nations to which it is so deeply indebted. would make for the general advantage of humanity.

the blue waters of the Pacific, a railway train is wending its deliberate and unhurried way, bearing delegates representing the Maine Chamber of Commerce. They carry with them a message of fellowship and friendship for those who have gone before them into that vast empire somewhat indefinitely referred to as the west. To many of those making the pilgrimage the experiences of the journey will be revealing and enlightening. The impression has persisted with some, despite the frequent exhibit of conarary facts, that the west is still in its formative period. It is so, indeed, if constant growth and development indicate a continuing metamorphosis, but to many it will come as a discovery that in industrial growth, social activity and civic pride the cities and towns of the western country yield nothing to the older civilization of the east.

The mission is altogether a friendly one. Between the two Portlands, one in Maine and the other in Oregon, there has long existed a sort of consanguineous bond, strengthened and preserved by the similarity of their names and relative positions. The western city, whatever may be the temporary stop-overs of the party, will be the destination of the Maine tourists. Along the way westward the train will be most of the time in Canadian territory, returning via the coast cities of California and the industrial centers of the middle west.

The day has long since passed when products bearing the mark of eastern factories were unquestionably accepted in the west, because of that, as superior to the products of the newer establishments in those sections. The friendly competition is becoming every year more keen. From the older industrial centers and technical schools of New England there have gone forth many who, encouraged by the freedom of greater opportunity in the west, have excelled, in method and in economic production, their more conservative mentors. The missionaries from Maine will meet these fledglings face to face somewhere in the broad areas of the west. Interesting and instructive exchanges of confidences and experiences will then be in order.

THE recognition of the Obregon Government of Mexico by the Government of the United States, which has just taken place, really is little more than the concluding phase of a cycle of Mexican-American relations which began in 1910. This was at the time of the military revolution, led by Madero against President Diaz, when, it will be remembered, a policy of non-interference was adopted by Mr. Taft, then resident of the United States. Within a short time, however, Mr. Taft mobilized units of the regular army on the border to guarantee neutrality and protect American interests, and for nearly a decade thereafter, American troops were stationed in this locality.

To those who have followed America's relations with this southern Republic the step just taken is seen as being in direct line with that country's general policy to give disinterested assistance to a friendly nation so long as the rights of Americans are properly safeguarded. In this particular instance, however, difficulties have presented themselves which have been of a particularly trying nature, so that the final attainment of the re-establishment of relations is especially noteworthy.

The terms of the announcement of the present agreement are of the simplest nature. Just, "the Government of the United States and the Government of Mexico . . . have resolved to renew diplomatic relations between them." Much more than appears on the surface, however, is included in this adjustment arranged by the two governments and in all probability those European countries which have been waiting to see what would be the line of action taken by the United States in this instance will shape their policy according to America's decision.

The news of the official recognition was received with, considerable enthusiasm throughout the southwestern section of the United States. Manufacturers and exporters there see the dawn of a new financial day. Their export business has been almost crippled of late because they have been compelled to do business on a very limited credit basis. This means that during the last three years many have had to sell to Mexican firms for cash, f. o. b. border points, usually the goods being consigned to customs brokers who furnished cash, the buyer assuming all shipping risks in Mexico. It is interesting to note in this connection that German business men have taken advantage of the Americans' position, and have been enabled to invade the fertile field of Mexican business, selling goods at competitive prices, and offering credit, in some cases, up to two years without interest. Now American credit men, who base their calculations on assets rather than probabilities, will be enabled to re-enter Mexico, and give correct ratings, realizing they have security. With this vital information in their possession, the American exporters will sell, and a normal condition will be restored in the southwest.

President Obregon, speaking before the El Paso Rotary Club two years ago, made this statement: "We have lost the official recognition of the United States, but we have gained even more-we have won the friendly recognition of its people." It is indeed a tribute to Don Alvaro, that his capable administration has now won for him complete recognition.

Nor infrequently ordinarily thoughtful persons, at least in the United States, have seen fit to complain of what they declare to be the law's delays. It has been charged that through the interposition of those able to retard the progress of court trials and those who specialize in the defense of accused offenders against the law. there have been miscarriages of justice so frequent as to discourage those who might instinctively invoke legal aid in an effort to compel a more general enforcement of the common right. Now the process has been reversed. At the meeting of the American Bar Association in Minneapolis, a special committee on law enforcement submitted a carefully compiled report in which it is charged that "the apathy and indifference of the American people toward law enforcement" are responsible, principally, for what is declared to be the increase in the number of crimes and criminals.

The indictment is one that cannot, be carelessly regarded. It must not be forgotten that the courts and all the machinery provided for the conviction of offenders against the law are the instruments and creations of the people of a democracy, just as are the legislative and administrative agencies provided under the Constitution. The courts acquire only that power and authority delegated to and invested in them, primarily, by the people.

The remedy, if one is sought, is to be found where all other remedies for so-called national, state and municipal ills are to be found—with the individual. The processes by which essential reforms may be worked out are: the ballot box, first of all; willingness to complain of and to compel the prosecution of violators of the law, and a willingness to serve upon grand and trial juries when summoned for such service. No perplexing problem can be solved for the body politic until the individuals comprising the mass solve them for themselves. Water will rise no higher than its source.

A reasonable appeal is made by the committee for greater uniformity in the penal codes of the several states of the Union. To those who object that there are already laws enough, there may be given the assurance that a uniform codification would not appreciably increase the number of laws. This is an activity upon which the members of the American Bar Association may wisely enter, it would seem. But the more important work remains for the people of the Nation as a whole. No legalistic code, civil or penal, has ever been devised which will arouse from lethargy or indifference those who carelessly surrender their privileges and duties as citizens to those as indifferent as themselves.

palette to add her simple record to the panorama which makes up the picture of the year. First of the autumn months, her advent is hardly noticed, usually, in the northern temperate zones. The time has not come to bid adieu to summer nor yet to prepare a grudging but courteous welcome to winter. But the gradually shortening daylight, the more frequent appearance of yellowing leaves in the forests and on the hillsides, the flying mists from the clumps of cattails that have grown so vigorously at the edge of ponds and lakes, are unfailing signs that September, unheralded, has parted the curtains for her dignified entrance. With what caution and careful attention to detail are the first markings made by her pencils and brushes! Into the simple green background there is quietly and painstakingly drawn a charming color outline, in bright yellows and soft brown, of the marvelous panorama which will be left for Queen October, prodigal waster of colors of richer shades, to complete. Already in the northern regions of the United States, in the mountain country of New England bordering the Canadian line, the birds and the little furry tribespeople of the woods are making preparations for the changing season. Soon there will be vast numbers of the former wending their unhurried way southward, where they and their forbears have learned that a seasonal welcome awaits them. The forest denizens who are so inclined will begin to lay by their winter stores of nuts and dry berries. The foraging raccoon will "stake his claim" in a near-by cornfield, where shocks of ripened grain sometimes remain until after snow flies. In the deeper forest, glens, young fawns, grown careless and unafraid under the protection of the older members of the herd, intuitively learn their first lesson in caution.

There will be summer days in September, despite the cool nights and the deepening haze which clings longer in the mornings to the mountain sides. But the inevitable change comes apace. Soon the invisible fires, so remote that they seem almost fanciful, will waft the sweet smoke of the Indian summer toward the south. The chestnut and hickory trees will shower their brown nuts upon the ground beneath them. Along the lake shore the late camper will hear again the distant cry of a loon, and through the gathering darkness at evening there will come the whir of wings, marking the passing or the temporary halting of wild ducks in flight. To those who read the language of the woods and lakes, these are the intelligible and inevitable whisperings of a delightful season.

Editorial Notes

WHEN it is remembered that there is hardly any greater domestic problem in the United States than the disrespect for law which is manifested in the attitude maintained by some of its citizens toward the Eighteenth Amendment, the strong stand for prohibition taken by George W. Wheeler, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Connecticut, is all the more significant. In a letter written by Mr. Wheeler to Judge Gary regarding the latter's recent interview upon enforcing the amendment, he heartily commends the latter's efforts. Mr. Wheeler cannot be ignorant that there actually are some judges who are aligned on the wet side, and it is hard to see how the law can be enforced when those to whom the task of enforcing it is committed are themselves guilty

Cause for the heartiest congratulations is the announcement made in a recent report to the Council of the League of Nations by Dr. Nansen that the Russian refugee problem is well on the road to solution. When, moreover, it is remembered how apparently impossible of solution this problem seemed to be a few years ago, this announcement stands out as all the more significant. And when it is recalled that the League of Nations is to a large extent responsible for what has been accomplished, even those prejudiced against this organization must surely find themselves forced to recognize the good therein accomplished.

Venizelos' Latest Message

ATHENS, Aug. 10 (Special Correspondence)—The old political world in Greece has crumbled down with the passing of Constantine and the definite withdrawal of Venizelos from the party politics of Greece. New political conceptions are now taking the place of the old platforms and new parties are in the making with a view to meeting a changed political situation and governing a Greece whose foreign problems are now settled, but within the boundaries of which a Herculean task must be performed. The time has come when the Greek statesmen must concentrate their best attention upon the internal affairs of their country. Venizelos, in his latest memorable message to the Greek people, published in the Athenian press recently, pointed out this need, the need of internal peace and co-operation, as the most serious matter in the life of the country.

No unprejudiced person in Greece, not even a political opponent, hesitates to admit today that the country had in Venizelos its ablest leader and statesman since the days of Pericles. With his characteristic frankness he always met every crisis squarely, and with his faith in political morality he never hesitated to acquaint the people with the truth. There are those who hate him, but few, if any, doubt his statements. But the people's faith in his sincerity was severely taxed when on the morrow of the disastrous elections of November, 1920, he issued a statement to the effect that he had definitely withdrawn from the active political life of Greece.

+ + + In this message he explained that his decision was not due to bitterness or disappointment but to his honest belief that he could do no further good to his country by identifying himself further with the party politics of Greece, either directly or indirectly. "Constantine and I must both go," he repeatedly stated to interviewers, "because we are the two persons around whom have centered the two antagonistic factions in Greece. I will never again participate in party politics, but I shall be willing to serve my country in a crisis, though never as the nominee or representative of a party, but of the Nation." With his characteristic foresight and frankness he made his stand clear, nearly three years ago, and has consistently kept his word.

When a despaired and defeated Greece appealed to him last September to take charge of its interests in Europe at large, he accepted his charge and fulfilled his task, both prior to and during the Lausanne Conference, in the able way which was expected of him. His heart must have suffered untold pain when he was signing with his own hand the Lausanne Treaty, whereby the Treaty of Sèvres, that charter of the liberty of the Christians of the Near East, which he had chiefly helped to make, was officially renounced.

No sooner, however, had Venizelos helped Greece abroad, than mysterious rumors got around to the effect that he had decided to return to Greece and take an active part in the party politics of his country. The Greek political horizon was once more clouded with uncertain expectations. The bosses of the Liberal Party welcomed such news with gratitude and joy, and the leaders of reaction and royalism sounded a rallying call to their followers, urging the closing of their ranks, the strengthening of their party, in order to meet the hated Venizelos with a united and strong opposition.

In the midst of this cataclysm of confusion came the great message of Venizelos, referred to above, as a thunderbolt out of a clear sky. Those who really know him expected nothing else, nothing less; and this message will be recorded in the political history of Greece as a political covenant to the coming

In it Venizelos frankly repeats in unequivocal terms his decision of withdrawal from the political life of the country. Especially, he asserts, is his withdrawal imperative after the passing on of Constantine. Thus with the two responsible leaders, Constantine and himself, definitely out of politics, the people must now think in the terms of coming together, forgetting all hate and prejudice. He pays a tribute to the splendid work of the revolutionary government and states that Greece would have fared worse in the Lausanne Conference but for the splendid reorganization of the army which the revolution accomplished. He accepts the full responsibility for his opposition to resuming war against Turkey (last spring), because he believes that such a war, though successful, would prove disastrous in the end. And then he emphasizes the imperative need of holding elections-free elections-and thus bringing the country back to its constitutional régime.

At this point he sounds a warning to the Greek statesmen by declaring courageously that Greece has now definitely settled all its territorial questions, and must definitely accept the present status. There remains nothing, therefore, but the sincere cultivation of friendships and understandings with all the countries in the Near East and the Balkan peninsula, the application of an honest policy of economic co-operation with all. He emphasizes the need of close understanding between Greece and its foes of yesterday, namely: Albania, Bulgaria, and Turkey. To the attainment of these worthy ends must the foreign policy of Greece concentrate its earnest attention.

 *  Passing from this subject to the important question of the form of the future Greek government, he admits that he believes in a Greek Republic, democracy with an elected president as against democracy with a hereditary king. He is of the opinion that the Greek people are in that state of political evolution in which that form of democracy which calls for an elected president is more suitable to them than the present form of democracy over which reigns a king. He considers that for this latter form of government, the people of Greece are not politically mature, having evidently in mind the British form of government, in which the King does not rule, and having in mind the recent experiences of Greece, in which the King did rule, violating the Constitution of the country.

In spite of his belief in a republican form of government, however; he frankly admits that the majority of the people of Greece prefer the present form of government. If a change comes, it should come by evolution and not by a simple election. Venizelos ends his message by stating that he yearns to return to his homeland and live as a private citizen, participating in the life of his country and interesting himself in questions of common weal with his countrymen. But, he states, he will not return until he is absolutely sure that his presence there will raise neither false hopes among his friends nor false alarms among his political opponents. Such was the memorable message of Venizelos and it produced a profound impression.

The writer has been able to ascertain from conversations with anti-Venizelists that since the publication of this message the great majority of the anti-Venizelist leaders are now willing to co-operate with leaders of other parties and lay the basis of a national party of conciliation. This is a movement to which the leader of the revolution, Colonel Plastiras, has devoted much time of late, with a view to creating a third party under the leadership of the veteran statesman, Mr. Zaimis.
